

Earth's First Immortals

“It’s one of the greatest moments in my life to stand here and listen to the amazing breakthroughs you twelve former students have accomplished. And I must include Bruce Salinski, too. Of course, he’s not one of my wife’s students. But he made the decision to make the leap into adhering to this consistent, hard honesty. He cut through illusions to the essence — to reality — in the decadent legal field. He began snapping together reality and building a powerful Neothink puzzle that broke him through to the next level never reached before in law. He, like all of you, is a testimony to the power of honesty.

“Anna and I...we love you so much. She told me, when we learned of this great reunion, that she had to attend. Her life would forever be incomplete, she told me, if she didn’t see you again. Thank you, all of you, for making her life complete. And thank you for being the greatest living examples to the books I’ve written.”

As the students clapped for this paternal man whom they loved, again Jake could feel how this other world was filled with love. He remembered Mr. Melbourne explaining before how these leaps of power — from the bicameral mentality into human consciousness three-thousand years ago and from consciousness into Neothink today — bring man a whole new emotional existence. This rich love, Jake thought, would fill civilization as it filled this room once the masses evolve into Neothink. Some of the wonderful changes of the other world, he realized, would not only be great wealth and health and other unbelievable values...but a world of powerful love based on these super value exchanges.

Theodore Winters stood up to talk. Although a slight physique, he projected power and strength. As he spoke, his words reverberated with wisdom.

“The collapse of government as a politicizing machine will free millions upon millions of start-up entrepreneurs to pursue their dreams. Businesses will have to shift to an entirely different paradigm to remain competitive. And that shift is exciting news for the ordinary person.

“I began sensing this shift twenty-seven years ago when I was building my door-to-door business at eight years old. Today, I have built my success upon that shift into the next paradigm of business. The world will follow when the external authorities collapse. The external authority problem today keeps people trapped in the division of labor, in nonthinking jobs of labor, which are physical, not mental. My new paradigm frees people by putting them in the division of essence, in jobs of the mind, which are mental, not physical.

“The essence of business is always the same, from its inception to its death: create a value, improve it, and market it. That essence is how a business makes profits. Today, only a handful of people in any business work on the essence of the business. The majority shut off their minds as they perform the labor. Tomorrow, most people in most businesses will work on the essences of their businesses. Yes, they will create, improve, and market the values. They will open their minds and make profits as they leap from jobs of labor to jobs of the mind. They will become entrepreneurs of their mini-companies within the company. The division of essence will divide companies into jobs of essence instead of jobs of labor...into ‘mini-companies’ or jobs of the mind. That division of essence springs free the greatest asset within every business: the employee’s integrating mind.

“Today, most people are stuck in set routines and are miserably stagnant. They just do their routines and don’t think. But their minds are begging to and designed to integrate knowledge, build Neothink puzzles, and get exhilarated over their competitive creations. Mini-companies can be formed in every existing business today. It’s a matter of first identifying the money-making purposes behind the company’s basic responsibilities and, second, putting together those responsibilities with the same money-making purposes into the mini-companies. Instead of dividing a business by its labor — which cuts off the essence, the money-making purpose — any CEO can divide his business by its essence, by attaching the responsibilities to their money-making purposes to create mini-companies and to keep every job tied to the money-making essence of the business. Then, all employees become internal entrepreneurs. That new paradigm of business releases the employees’ human potential. Moreover, they become happy, super stimulated people building their creations. I see it all the time in my business.”¹

Theodore went on to talk about how to grow a division-of-essence company through spreading the “genetic code” of the original entrepreneur through a technique he called replicating. Replicating passed along the entrepreneurial spirit and thought patterns, which would obsolete the inferior technique of delegating. Delegating passed down routine ruts.

He talked about essence tracking reports and monthly essence meetings that enable him to snap together his many companies into a single Neothink puzzle to easily lead his empire forward.

He talked about his personal mini-day schedule that broke his day into physical movements that, like the assembly line that broke production into physical movements, enabled him to tenfold his work capacity. And he talked about his potent power-thinking technique that he did every morning in the shower. He would look into the future at each active project to its completed form. Then he would look backwards and figure out the steps needed to achieve that completed image, and he would insert those steps into his high-action mini-days that moved him through enormous amounts of work. That mini-day/power-thinking team was his secret behind his legendary reputation of moving through complex projects in a day or two that took competitors months. ...Theodore made every person in that glass house wish he had a pen and pad to write down his revelations of business.²

Theodore concluded his talk with gratitude to Miss Annabelle. “Her lectures,” he said, “were my roots that grew into who I am today.”

Next Natasha spoke. “Theodore said people will go from boring jobs of labor to exciting jobs of the mind,” she said. “Robert said to me earlier that people will discover their Friday-Night Essences and love to go to work. I say, following this job revolution will come a love revolution. People will live their entire lives with the spectacular feelings they had during the first few months while first falling in love!"

She went on to explain how love comes from happiness, and how most people down deep are not happy with their livelihoods. Her workshops worked on the problem today, she explained, "but the new world tomorrow with no more external authorities and with those exhilarating jobs of the mind linking up with people's Friday-Night Essences will bring about a world not only filled with wealth, but also filled with motivation, exhilaration, happiness and love."

Love. There's that word again, Jake thought. A world filled with love...

Daniel Ward got up to talk next. He looked at Mr. Melbourne and said, "You're absolutely right, sir. The whole idea behind the Neo-Tech Party is not politics, but the removal of external authorities. As humanity advances into a mentality that no longer needs external guidance, the Neo-Tech Party will be the only survivor. The Neo-Tech Party serves one premise: protection of the individual from physical aggression. The government would exist for protection only and would consist of courts, police, and a national army only. I think you're all familiar with the half-trillion-dollar Protection Only Budget that would change our current government of offense to a government of defense. And I think you're all aware of the Great Replacement/Great Displacement Program: entrepreneurs will replace career politicians, and we'll displace, to the private sector, government programs that have nothing to do with protection of the individual and his property. The result of the Neo-Tech Party will be a government that runs like a business accountable to results on how well it protects its citizens. ...Of course, changing our current government of offense that politicizes more and more aspects of our lives...to a government of defense that protects the individual and nothing more, will cause a major political revolution. The thousands upon thousands of laws, regulations, and litigation that exist because today's government aggressively politicizes our lives...will vanish. Enterprise, technology, and medicine will finally be free of politics. The progress and prosperity can only be touched upon in my Six Visions. You've all heard my Six Visions, which are the basis of my campaign."

Earth's First Immortals

Daniel expanded on the fact that the political revolution would set off a great Technological Revolution. He compared it to the computer revolution of the 1980s and 1990s, but said the coming Technological Revolution will occur in every industry. The result, as with computers, will drive up everyone's buying power a thousand to ten thousand times. "People will be rich," he said.

Jake now knew the answer to his question earlier: these people were not mere geniuses, they were something much more. "What is it?" he had asked. Now he knew: they were the first wave of the next level of humanity. They had a different mentality altogether as Mr. Melbourne had said. But now Jake understood: they were the next evolution of man. These twelve former students, their teacher and her husband, and the lawyer will, Jake thought, change the world. They're the answer to humanity's eternal prayer for a better world...a world brimming with love.

Sally Salberg walked to the front to talk. She was petite, beautiful, and she was the most powerful woman Jake had ever witnessed. She started where Daniel ended, "Following the political revolution and the collapse of external authorities and the many regulatory bureaucracies such as the FTC and FDA," she said, "there'll undoubtedly be, as Daniel said, a great Technological Revolution throughout all industries — the medical industry included. The political revolution will be the first domino to go. Once it falls and takes down the regulatory bureaucracies, then comes the great Technological Revolution, a medical revolution, a job revolution, a love revolution and, I'm sure, a legal revolution as Mr. Salinski was implying, a religious revolution as Jeremiah implied, and, as Miss Annabelle demonstrated through us, an educational revolution. From what Mr. Melbourne says, all those revolutions will be the result of man's next evolution into God-Man when people use Neothink to guide themselves completely without any further need for external authorities. As the metaphor God-Man implies, man will be his own God, his own authority and guide. Mr. Melbourne was right: the world will change in the most incredibly wonderful ways."

She just summed up the power being uncovered during this reunion. Imagine, Jake thought, a revolution occurring in every existing structure of civilization, from wealth to love! He realized that the dawn of a new civilization was arriving.

"It is in that mental oasis — dreaming ahead to the coming changes of good that surpass even our imaginations — that I want to talk to you today. You may be the only people who can enter this space with me. ...I'll start by asking you a simple question..."

She is the epitome of beauty, competence, and power, Jake was thinking...what a pleasure to watch and listen to her.

"What is the only thing really, really wrong in life?" she was saying. "Failed relationships...divorce? I'd venture to say no, for failed relationships are part of life from which we can learn, grow, and go on to even better love. Failed business ventures...bankruptcy? For the same reasons, I'd venture to say no, for failed business ventures are part of life from which we can learn, grow, and eventually go on to greater success. The only thing really, really wrong with life is...death. Death is not part of life; there is no learning, growth, or anything better to come from death. Nothing can be gained; everything is lost."

Jake looked around the room. Everyone was hanging on her every word: She had, in one statement, reached deep into her former classmates' souls and plucked their deepest nerves. Does she know a secret to averting this eternal tragedy of death? These people who loved life so much wanted to know.

"When you experience devastating losses in your life such as divorce or bankruptcy," she continued, "your mind, subconsciously at first and consciously later on, immediately goes to work on fixing the problem. In time, most honest, productive persons will overcome and rise again. When you experience the devastating loss of a loved one, your mind tries to do the same thing. Subconsciously at first and consciously later on, it tries to fix the problem. The honest, productive person enters a torturous emotional war that will end in total, unforgiving defeat. His mind will attack the problem of having lost a loved one over and over again, and his emotions will get battered and defeated mercilessly battle after battle. In the end, years later after a long and weary fight, his psyche will surrender to the fact that this is the one and only problem the honest, productive mind cannot conquer. Again, I submit death is the only thing really, really wrong with life. Human death is the problem. To cure the problem has been my underlying, driving motivation behind all I have done in the medical world. My ultimate goal is to cure aging and end death.”

Jake's heart started beating hard and his eyes started blinking fast when he realized what Sally was saying. Still, in disbelief, he asked himself, what is this Nobel Prize nominee saying? Is she talking about staying young and living forever? Jake had come across hokey life-extension theories, but here the famous Sally Salberg, the epitome of competence, said her whole drive in life was to eliminate death! The real possibility of immortality landed with a hard impact in Jake's guts. He'd never thought much about dying until now. But suddenly, with the real possibility of not someday dying, the idea of dying seemed repulsively irrational.

“My discovery of the flu vaccine came about during my work on cancer. My approach toward cancer, specifically controlling the production of cancer cells, ties directly into my work on aging. I'm working toward controlling cellular growth: to shut it off in the case of cancer tumors...and to turn it on to cure the ultimate disease of cellular degeneration or aging. As an outgrowth of this work, I'm involved with doctors who, by combining their techniques, may offer temporary solutions to averting death, which would buy people time to make it to the definitive cure of aging itself.

“I feel you are the only people in the world to whom I can express the unfathomable loss I feel when a loved one dies. How can this civilization accept the loss of loved ones? How, particularly, can you?”

“I feel completely alone among the medical world in feeling the panic, day and night, to cure aging before another loved one dies. I witness other doctors caught up in this fight to save life when operating on a dying individual. But every healthy person alive is going to die to cellular degeneration. Aging is merely a disease — the most horrific disease that ever existed — the disease that wipes out every single person! The disease is so big that no one sees it for what it is. It's humanity's most universal illusion. When you clear the illusion, man's greatest moral duty on this earth is to cure this disease that kills everyone
